Out of the things that distinguishes man from other animals is the power of speech. Write it is true that most animals and birds can utter cries which indicate emotion, anger, fear, affection - nevertheless their range of sounds is very limited, so that they are not capable of expressing more complicated emotion. On the other hand, man can express a very wide range of ideas and emotions through speech.

Words are only symbols to which special values and meanings have become attached by general agreement. The same object consisting of printed. Pages and a cover, is called by a French Speaker - Livre, by an English speaker-book and by a Hindi speaker Kitab; the object of the same in each age. But in each linguistic community, a different word to describe it has been agreed upon other symbols may be used instead of linguistic ones; a red light is used to indicate danger; a police man's upheld hand tells us to stop, A fore finger held to the lips warns no to be quiet. But these substitutes are fairly few in number and therefore cannot be used except in very limited circumstances.
