The crown and glory of life is character. It is the noblest possession of a man. Character is, in fact, a rank in itself because it dignifies every position in society. It has a greater power than wealth and it secures for a man all the honour without the jealousies of fame. It always carries with it some influence. For it is the result of man's honesty and consistency. And these qualities, perhaps more than any other, command the general confidence and respect of mankind. As daylight can be seen through very small holes, so little things will show a persons' character. A person who talks tall and acts meanly is soon caught. Indeed, character reveals itself in little acts well and honourably done. And our daily life is the quarry from which we build it :
