In the schools of modern Japan physical education occupies an important place in the course. Teachers and pupils set out on walking tours, carrying their own provisions with them and get accustomed to rough weather. The Japanese would come out very high if a proper test of physical fitness were to be held through out the world.

As regards their history, they are today as intensely proud of it as ever before and pay a very great attention to the making and preserving of their national records. In personal cleanliness there is no nation today that comes up to the Japanese. Not to be clean is considered a great social crime by the rich and the poor alike; consequently Japanese houses are the neatest and cleanest dwellings in the world.

The foremost need is to give girls good education so that, besides learning to read and write, they also have the opportunity to move out from the security of the four walls of the home life and acquire some self-confidence. If women are well educated, they will learn not only their rights which now everybody else knows, but also their obligations to the home, to the society and to the nation. They will also learn the significance of the role they can play in rearing and educating their children. It should be recognised that in Indian families, the ladies have a very powerful role in running household, in teaching manners to the children and in their dealings with friends and relatives on both sides. Unless, they are very well-educated, they cannot play this role well.
